The Gillian Film is a moving portrait of an exceptional young woman who works at a local veterinary clinic, rides horses, takes dance classes, and is developmentally disabled.

The film shares the difficulties and joys of both raising and being a person whose abilities are in constant and productive tension with her distinctive thought styles and cognitive capacities. Ultimately, however, through an examination of one life defined a different, The Gillian Film explores how we might transform our understanding of the meaning and worth of people with developmental disabilities.

"The Gillian Film is a bold and courageous documentary: a personal and family narrative, a coming-of-age film, and a materialization of pressing themes in contemporary disability studies."

—Barry Saunders, MD, PhD.

Clinical Assistant Professor of Medicine and Family Medicine, UNC School of Medicine
